

With 21 years of previous radio broadcasting experience (1963-1984) I must say that there is currently NO localism in radio. I am now in the travel industry and spend time listening to radio in markets throughout the USA. A Citadel station in New York sounds exactly like one in Arizona. A Clear Channel station in Florida mimics one in Washington. I now listen to college stations or CD's as "local" stations offer nothing new or innovative in their markets. I long for the days of restricted ownership when a radio station really had to program to it's local community.
